Langdale Pikes. These hills, a prominent object in the Grasmere Lake district, consist of two summits, Harrison Stickle (2,101 feet), and Pike o' Stickle (2,323 feet). A peculiar feature of these hills is that they seem from many standpoints to be the most lofty peaks in the district, but when the summit is attained one finds the view to be limited by loftier peaks in all directions.

Langdale Pikes from Elterwater. These are two in number, Pike o' Stickle and Harrison Stickle. Seen from Elterwater, looking up Langdale, they dominate every lovely scene, beautiful in any weather and at any season, and are as imposing from this point of view as from the favourite (and near) one from Blea Tarn, so dear to photographers generally. They are 2,323 feet and 2,401 feet high respectively.
